

These three talks will give a brief overview of the applications of information technology to deep space exploration. Topics will include a brief overview of the status of current deep space missions, the application of networking technology to the retrieval of data from deep space spacecraft, and the application of fault tolerance and embedded computing techniques to on-board spacecraft.

Note: This talk is based on publicly available material.